

Sunday August 22, 2010

Chewing the fat

Andrew Lansley's support of calorie counts in restaurants is a blow to evidence-based policy-making ("Checking the bill? No, the calories", News, August 8). Scientific evidence reveals calorie counts are impractical, ineffective and often counterproductive. We should therefore question the assumptions underpinning this alleged solution to an imaginary problem.

Dr Patrick Basham, Director, Democracy Institute London EC1